

In April 2011 Martin Roe was diagnosed with Aspergers Syndrome which he has had, unknowingly, for his whole life. In this book he presents work that has been unconsciously influenced by Aspergers, and would perhaps not have been possible without the condition. All the 131 stunning full colour photographs in this book have been taken using kite aerial photography, a technique that he has been using almost exclusively for three years rarely taking photographs from a conventional viewpoint. Through these images you will be forced to look at the world differently, giving you a little taste of what it is like to have Aspergers. Showing how having a different perspective can be positive, providing a fresh, often unique, view of the world.
